The Agenda 2030 as well as the Addis Ababa Consensus have reiterated governments' commitment to the realization of decent work and social protection for all. The EU, through its development cooperation policy and programs, is already greatly contributing to the achievement of these objectives. The forthcoming review of the national indicative programs, negotiated in the framework of the 11th European Development Fund, will be an opportunity to further pursue the progressive realization of these rights and better align EDF programs with the Agenda 2030 spirit. Through the launch of the Social Protection Monitor Report, this seminar will be the opportunity for an exchange between African CSOs and EU representatives on this issue.

For the EU, Africa is described as both an area afflicted by poverty, food insecurity, ill-governance and conflict, but also as a continent of opportunity and growth. Within this framework, local and regional authorities are recognised as playing an increasingly vital role in ensuring a more equitable implementation of development policies in the continent. This seminar will aim to explore the significance of local governance in reducing poverty, fighting inequality and fostering a more sustainable future for Africa.

S&D Group Conference

Africa: In the Heart of a Globalised World

The conference "Africa: In the Heart of a Globalised World" is the focal point of the S&D Group Africa Week. It is a unique opportunity for distinguished African guests, high-level EU representatives, international experts and the wider audience to discuss common challenges and opportunities faced by Africa and Europe. Our aim is to facilitate an open and thought-provoking discussion on how Africa and the EU can re-shape their relations to make them more balanced, for the benefit of both sides, in the coming years and in the post-Cotonou era. We will engage in a debate on the crucial role that Africa is to play in responding to global challenges of the modern day: political, economic, social and environmental ones alike.

Opening session

Africa/EU relations – Past, present and future

Speakers:

European Parliament president Martin Schulz

EU high representative for foreign affairs and security policy/European Commission vice-president Federica Mogherini

Panel 1

Viva Africa - Africa in the eyes of Africans

Africa is an enormous continent inhabited by people with diverse social, ethnic and cultural backgrounds. Nonetheless, we are currently witnessing the emergence of a new pan-African identity. Speakers will try to define what it means in 2015 to be "African" and "European".

Panel 2

Gifted Africa - The Africa of talents

Africa is in the midst of a remarkable demographic shift with profound consequences for the continent's future. It is about to benefit from a sharply rising ratio of people of working age to dependents. When Asia experienced a similar demographic revolution three decades ago, it gave a powerful boost to economic growth. However, much more is needed to unleash the full potential of African people, and this panel discussion will be an opportunity to share views on how Africa and Europe can collaborate to create more favourable conditions for the talents to flourish, as well as to support education, human development and entrepreneurship skills.

Changing Africa - New waves of citizens' activism for democracy and human rights

Far-reaching ambitions of young democratic movements in Africa are often confronted with harsh realities of undemocratic regimes. It is thus essential to draw our attention to these movements by discussing ways of supporting democratisation and the promotion of human rights by youth activists in the continent. We believe that the EU is capable of playing a greater role in this process, and that the perspectives of African youth activists can greatly enrich also the European understanding of democracy and human rights.

The youth holds the future of our continents - therefore, listening to the views, hopes and fears of young people is essential when defining our agenda for the years and decades to come.*

The EU and the S&D Group are devoted to work with our African partners in further consolidating regional and local capabilities, and are considering ways to further strengthen and extend our support for the development of African capacities in the areas of conflict prevention, management and resolution. As well, the EU is committed to help strengthen and consolidate UN peace support operations and assist post-conflict reconstruction efforts. This co-operation is entrenched in the fundamental principle of ownership, with the main responsibility lying with Africa itself. In this regard, the Peace and Security Council of the African Union, which is based on this principle, will shape up the framework for strengthening the African security architecture. In this respect, we underline the vital role to be played by African sub-regional organisations in contributing to the resolution of conflicts. They are important building blocks for African political and economic integration, and they have the potential to contribute to securing peace and prosperity in the continent.

The Kivu in the Democratic Republic of Congo, a lake in one of the most unstable regions in the world, is portrayed through the stories of local fishermen. They live on and thanks to the lake, they know all his secrets. They tell them, drifting with the flow on their pirogue, or during a late evening gathering along the lake's banks: Two warring countries: Rwanda and the DRC, the rumour of a killer fish, a gigantic reserve of methane about to blow up, or old women's fabulous memories... So many stories about life and death, fishing and legacy, which form a tales' collection, and reveal the secret identity of an amazing place.

According to Human Dignity Trust, an important NGO supporting those who want to challenge anti-gay laws wherever they exist in the world, 78 pieces of legislation in force across the world criminalise homosexuality: 34 of those are in Africa, in over 60 per cent of the total of 54 independent African states. Most of these criminal laws are the heritage of colonialism, but in many instances they have taken on a new life, inflamed by religious bigotry, political scapegoating, and Western evangelical organisations. Nevertheless, change is coming to Africa, and old attitudes are changing. The condemnation of criminalisation by the international community - by actors like the UN or the EU - is significant. Notably, the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights adopted last year its first-ever resolution calling on African states to end all acts of violence and abuse against people on the basis of their sexual orientation or gender identity. Also in 2015, three African court decisions - in Botswana, Kenya and Zambia - have asserted basic freedoms in the face of popular prejudice and discriminatory laws. These cases represent significant progress and have broader implications with regard to countries' obligations to uphold basic rights for marginalized or unpopular groups. In this spirit, GPF and IUSY have decided to focus attention on LGBTI rights in the framework of this evening event.

Ils défient démocratiquement et pacifiquement les pouvoirs aux tendances autoritaires dans leur pays. Ils rendent de l'espoir et l'envie de l'action collective à des jeunes Africains marginalisés par leurs gouvernements. Ils utilisent les technologies de la communication, la téléphonie mobile, Internet et les réseaux sociaux pour entretenir des contacts et créer des solidarités au-delà des frontières. Ils inventent, à travers des actions concrètes simples, un nouveau mode de mobilisation citoyenne. Depuis 2011, les mouvements Y'en a marre au Sénégal, puis Balai citoyen au Burkina Faso, et enfin Filimbi ("sifflet" en swahili) en République démocratique du Congo se sont érigés en sentinelles face aux dirigeants. Se démarquant des partis politiques et des syndicats, dans lesquels la jeunesse ne se reconnaît souvent pas, ils encouragent les jeunes et les moins jeunes à s'intéresser au débat politique, à faire entendre leur voix, à développer des réflexes citoyens. Et surtout à ne pas accepter la soumission à un autoritarisme politique trop fréquemment présenté en Afrique comme une fatalité. "Nous sommes conscients de notre condition de 'génération sacrifiée', mais nous ne comptons pas nous laisser sacrifier. En tant que citoyens, nous avons le devoir de participer à la gestion de la chose publique et à la démocratie. C'est par nous que viendront les changements", disait Kilifeu, du mouvement Y'en a marre, dans une interview avec Jeune Afrique (19 mars 2015). Et de fait, au Burkina Faso, le Balai citoyen a joué un rôle moteur dans l'insurrection populaire qui a mené à la chute du régime de Blaise Compaoré le 31 octobre 2014.
